BERENADE.

BY JOHN N. M'JILTON. Awake love, awake, for the stars are bright Awake lave, awake, in the stars are on And the more an usual are well:

Awake while the spirit of the might,
Guards the valley, deep, and hill:

Sitent is all, save the sound that comes,
Like the rash of a spirit's wing.

Andible now on the air that home,
From every growing thing.

Wake, while I som;
Linto the numbers love,

Into the numbers, love, Thy sweet voice fing.

Thy aweet voice flag.

Our acong shall sweety, o'er the silence deep,
And the strains on the either swimming.

Shall swell o'er the vale, o'er the hill and the dale
Like a chorus of angels hymming.
The brest shades, and the sentred glades.
Shall each the note as they man,
And bound through the shuming grass.

Wake from thy slowbers, love,
Wake while I sing:
Into the numbers, love,
Thy aweet voice flug.

Thy awest votoe fing.

Wake, love, wake, for the maiden moon,
Is tripping above the len;
Night's opers she comes, and her light will soon
Beam through the lattice on thee.
The develope now in her silver sheen,
Are shining like diamonds bright,
They cluster thick, and the lorest green,
Seema leden with stars to rought.

Wake from thy slumbers, love,
Wake with Lang.

Wake while I sing ; late the numbers, love, Thy sweet voice flug. Away o'er flower, o'er brake and bower,

Away o'er flower, a'er brake and bower,
The mone sweetly awenging.
Will waken the tays on the spungled brace,
That now are so mingly adepend.
Awake love, wake, ere the morning break,
For the stars are wanning taken.
And the mone rellie on to another zone;
Wake in the inplica pass.
Wake to the inplica pass.
Into my arms, love,
Wake while I send.
The waves self-these.

Thy aweet self thing.
